

From my understanding of the law, Sinclair Broadcasting, by using the public airwaves free of charge, is obligated to serve the public interest. Airing an anti-Kerry documentary just before the election seems to be obviously in violation of this law.

I believe it's unfortunate when people and companies are driven solely by money and greed, while integrity, honesty, and ethics go out the window. This sort of broadcasting does not serve the public interest, because it is blatantly attempting to sway to public's opinion on political matters. How can you expect someone to make an EDUCATED decision when all you give them is one side of the issue? This is unethical, not to mention against the law. Apparently, Sinclair is above the law. And/or the lawmakers simply aren't effective enough.

It scares me to imagine what kind of world we would be living in if this sort of behavior is continued. We have to think about the future. Not just about how much money we'll have by the end of the year, but instead about how our actions affect society and how intricate, complex and far-reaching those effects are. Businesses and people with narrow minds and short-sightedness, driven by greed, fail to see this. But I see it. And I know I'm not the only one.
